CRIME DROP A 30 YEAR LOW

“Record decreases in robbery, burglary and auto theft touted”

JERSEY CITY – Mayor Jerramiah T. Healy and police department officials announced today official statistics that show record declines in several crime categories for 2009, including a 30 percent drop in robberies.

The released crime statistics, certified by the State Police to eventually be released in the annual FBI Uniform Crime Report, showed that Jersey City had an overall drop in both violent and non-violent crimes. Violent crimes – which include homicide, robbery, rape and aggravated assault – dropped 15.6 percent. Robberies dropped the most, with a 30.4 percent plummet.

In 2009 there were a total of 873 robberies in the city, 381 fewer cases than 2008 and the first time there have been fewer than 1,000 such incidents since the ‘80s. In records gathered by the FBI, in 1980 there were 1,700 robberies in the city, which eventually peaked over 30 years to 2,582 cases in 1992.

“Whenever you experience any type of decrease in crime you have to be pleased, but when the numbers are proven to be double digit drops, you have to applaud the exceptional efforts of the men and women in law enforcement,” said Mayor Healy. “The decreases we’ve seen in certain categories are phenomenal, but we can’t rest with that success. I’m encouraged that we can still do even better by staying focused and committed to the cause of making our community better.”

Last year assaults dropped 10.5 percent and rapes decreased to 45 confirmed incidents, or a 10 percent drop.

In the Non-Violent Crime category, Jersey City realized nearly a 20 percent decline, (19.9%), that was the result of another first in more than three decades where less than 1,000 cars were stolen in city limits. Last year there were 800 cars stolen in the city, 309 fewer than in 2008 for a 27.9 percent fall.

The sharp drop continues the trend after the city had an all-time high in the category in 1990 where a staggering 5,030 cars were stolen. In comparing 1990 to 2009, last year's 800 mark is a monumental 84 percent decrease in stolen vehicles.

Likewise, burglaries and arson incidents dropped by significant totals as well to affect the non-violent category. In 2009, there were 472 fewer burglaries, or 1,393 cases, for a 25.3 percent drop compared to the prior year. Also, there were 21 fewer arsons in 2009, causing a 26.3 percent drop that category.

"We've been able to analyze crime trends more effectively since the implementation of Comstat in 2005, whereby the timely vetting of crime statistics citywide has made us more effective in targeting certain crimes and problem areas over the years," said Police Chief Tom Comey. "I think we are on the right course when you have significant crime decreases in most of the violent crime categories and double-digit drops in all of the non-violent crime categories despite the troubling economy where many theorists believe it only adds to more crime."

"We have a great working relationship with all levels of levels of law enforcement, be it the county, state and federal agencies, putting our resources together for intelligence-based policing initiatives," said Comey, referring to the OPERATION VEST I and II, where dozens of violent offenders with gang and drug-operation ties were arrested in evening and pre-dawn sweeps last year. "The sharing of information between agencies has made us more effective and the results bare that point."

The only categories that saw an increase in the city was homicide, where there were 28 cases compared to the 26 in 2008.
